The camp provided a brief but intensive exposure to the ways for the care and control diabetes, focusing attention on the young and tender age of the recipient subjects (However, we do realize the need for continued and ongoing reinforcement and health care support demanded by this lifelong malady, especially when it afflicts in early years and prime of life). Gaining self-confidence in travel, staying away from home conditions, and learning self-management (self-injection in all now) were achieved, though possibly to varying degrees. The important role not only of the specialist physicians, but also of the diabetes nurses, nutritionists, and health educators in the success of diabetes care was realized (team effort mandatory).

Outcome:Overall attitudinal changes were brought out by the experience of living together, and amongst peers while attaining a positive concept to live a full life despite diabetes mellitus ("Let not diabetes control you, but you control your diabetes" as one young diabetic camper put it).
